Report on Two-Day Workshop on “Pre-Historic Stone Tools” (23–24 December 2025)

The Department of History, in collaboration with the Internal Quality Assurance Cell (IQAC), Government Degree College Nankhari, successfully organized a two-day academic workshop on the theme “Pre-Historic Stone Tools” on 23rd and 24th December 2025. The workshop was designed to provide students with both theoretical knowledge and practical exposure to the earliest phases of human history, with special emphasis on the evolution of humans and the development of tool-making skills.

On the first day, the academic sessions were conducted by Assistant Professor Sharmila Nalwa, Department of History. The session focused on the evolution of human beings, highlighting important facts related to bipedalism, the gradual development of the human brain, and the significance of these changes in human survival and progress. The students were also introduced to the concept of tool-making, its meaning, purpose, and role in prehistoric societies. The lecture was interactive and helped students understand how stone tools reflect human intelligence, adaptability, and cultural development during prehistoric times.

The second day of the workshop was devoted to practical learning and student participation. Students were divided into different groups for a hands-on session on stone tools, where they learned about the identification, use, and importance of various prehistoric stone tools. This activity enabled students to connect theoretical concepts with practical understanding. Following the hands-on session, group-wise presentations were delivered by the students, showcasing their learning outcomes, observations, and interpretations related to prehistoric stone tools. The presentations encouraged teamwork, critical thinking, and academic expression among the participants.

An important feature of the workshop was its interdisciplinary participation. Along with History students, students from other departments also showed keen interest and actively participated in the sessions, making the workshop academically enriching and inclusive.

Overall, the two-day workshop proved to be highly informative and engaging. It enhanced students’ understanding of prehistoric life, human evolution, and early technological developments. The collaborative efforts of the Department of History and IQAC played a vital role in making the workshop a successful academic event, contributing positively to experiential and outcome-based learning at GDC Nankhari.
